■ Many Christians find the Old Testament to be a difficult book. It seems full of obscure rituals, ancient customs, strange laws, and a mixture of inspiring and horrifying stories. It doesn't help that many pastors infrequently preach from the Old Testament, leaving ordinary Christians on their own to try to figure it out. Indeed, some churches have gone further than that. During a recent visit to the Mennonite museum in Shipshewana, Indiana, I was struck by the prominent announcement that Mennonites are "New Testament Christians," as if that were a separate category of believers.

Certainly many Christians live their lives functionally ignoring large parts of the Old Testament, either deliberately or because they simply are not sure what to do with them. Yet the apostle Paul was talking about the Old Testament when he said,

All Scripture is breathed out by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, and for training in righteousness, that the man of God may be competent, equipped for every good work.
(2 Tim. 3:16–17)

The Old Testament is for Christians too.

■ Is Jesus in the Old Testament?

What is more, this little booklet contends that Christ is present throughout the Old Testament. He is not merely present through a physical appearance here and there, or through the right interpretation of this or that Old Testament prophecy or type, but he is there on every page as the central theme and storyline of the entire book. Rightly interpreted, the whole Old Testament is about Jesus Christ. More specifically, the Old Testament focuses on and prepares for Christ's sufferings and the glories that will follow—that is, the gospel. As we shall see, this is the perspective that the New Testament itself teaches us to take toward the Old Testament.

However, I also want to explore what it means to rightly see Christ in the Old Testament. Not every attempt to discern the figure of Jesus in the Old Testament has been profitable. Some well-meaning interpreters have allowed their imaginations to run wild on this theme, so we need to learn how to read the story in a way that draws out what is truly there instead of inserting false connections to the gospel.

Finally, I want to look at some specific ways in which the Old Testament focuses on and prepares us to see and understand Christ and his ministry in the gospel.

WHAT IS THE CENTRAL MESSAGE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT?

Why should we expect to see Jesus in the Old Testament? The simple answer is that this is how the New Testament teaches us to read it. Recall the words of Jesus on the road to Emmaus. On that occasion Jesus caught up with two despondent disciples who were leaving Jerusalem after the crucifixion, unaware of the resurrection. As they walked in the gathering gloom of evening, he took them on a tour of the Old Testament Scriptures, exposing their woefully inadequate knowledge and understanding by saying,

“O foolish ones, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken! Was it not necessary that the Christ should suffer these things and enter into his glory?” And beginning with Moses and all the Prophets, he interpreted to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself. (Luke 24:25–27)

In other words, Jesus unfolded the Old Testament, showing them how it is fulfilled in him. According to Jesus, we should expect the message of “Moses and all the prophets” (that is, the whole of the Old Testament) to be Jesus Christ. Notice too that the disciples’ response was not to be amazed at his cleverness in uncovering references to himself in such a wide range of sources. Rather, they were astonished at their own dullness in not having recognized before what these familiar books were about.

Nor was this simply Jesus’ message on one particular occasion to those particular two disciples. In that case, the connection between Christ and the Old Testament might simply be an interesting footnote or sidelight to Jesus’ main message. However, Luke 24:44–48 gives us the substance of Jesus’ teaching to all the disciples in the forty-day period between his resurrection and ascension.

“These are my words that I spoke to you while I was still with you, that everything written about me in the Law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms must be fulfilled.” Then he opened their minds to understand the Scriptures, and said to them, “Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer and on the third day rise from the dead, and that repentance and forgiveness of sins should be proclaimed in his name to all nations, beginning from Jerusalem. You are witnesses of these things.”

This is a summary of Jesus’ master class in Old Testament interpretation, given during the climactic last days of his earthly teaching ministry. Notice the comprehensiveness of the language Jesus uses: “Everything written about me in the Law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms must be fulfilled.” The Law of Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms make up the three divisions of the Hebrew Old Testament, which Luke later designates “the Scriptures.” In other words, the focus of his teaching was not on a few “messianic” texts here and there, but rather the entire Old Testament. According to Jesus, then, the whole of the Old Testament Scriptures constitutes a message about Christ.

Yet the Scriptures are not only generally a message about Jesus. More specifically, Jesus told his disciples that the central focus of the entire Old Testament is his sufferings, his resurrection, and the proclamation of the gospel to all nations, beginning in Jerusalem. The Old Testament is therefore a book whose every page is designed to unfold for us the gospel of Jesus Christ, accomplished by his sufferings and resurrection and applied through the outpouring of the Spirit on all nations.

Jesus’ followers struggled to understand many aspects of his teaching during his earthly ministry. Yet this part of his message was clearly communicated to his disciples. Thus Peter says,

Concerning this salvation, the prophets who prophesied about the grace that was to be yours searched and inquired carefully, inquiring what person or time the Spirit of Christ in them was indicating when he predicted the sufferings of Christ and the subsequent glories. (1 Peter 1:10–11)

Paul likewise declared to King Agrippa, “I stand here testifying both to small and great, saying nothing but what the prophets and Moses said would come to pass: that the Christ must suffer and that, by being the first to rise from the dead, he would proclaim light both to our people and to the Gentiles” (Acts 26:22–23).¹

According to Jesus and the apostles, then, when you interpret the Old Testament correctly, you find that its focus is not primarily stories about moral improvement, calls for social action, or visions concerning end-time events. Rather, the central message of the Old Testament is Jesus: specifically the sufferings of Christ and the glories that follow—both the glorious resurrection of Christ and the glorious inheritance that he has won for all of his people. Certainly, understanding this gospel should lead to a new morality in the lives of believers. It should motivate and empower us to seek to meet the needs of the lost and broken world around us and should engage our passion for the new heavens and the new earth that will be realized when Christ returns. But the heart of the message of the Old Testament is a witness to Christ, which centers on his suffering and glory, his death and resurrection.

What Difference Does It Make?

This focus on the gospel as the center of the whole Bible, Old and New Testament alike, has several important implications.

First, it means that the gospel (the good news about Jesus’ death and resurrection) is not merely the starting Jonathan Bernis, in Finding Jesus in the Old Testament, makes this brief statement to buttress the point presented in the foregoing paragraph: For example, the name Yeshua means "salvation" or "God saves." His name signifies why He came into this world "to rescue us from the penalty we deserve because of our sins. Let's take a look at a few times Yeshua's name is mentioned in the Old Testament (with emphasis added) For a few were the New Testament references the Old Testament with regards to Jesus, it is apparent the apostles believed Jesus to be the LORD mentioned in the Old Testament. The New Testament declares Jesus to be the Lord God of the Old Testament. New Testament quotes about Jesus. Acts 2:21. One way to do this is to walk through the Old Testament, following the centuries-long expectation of God's people for the promised Messiah. This spirit is found in one of our advent hymns: "Come, Thou Long-Expected Jesus." It reads In this spirit, I would like to offer a series of brief meditations on how the Old Testament anticipates Jesus' coming and in which Christ appears prior to his incarnation. If these direct our thoughts to Christ during the holiday season, and especially if these meditations prove suitable for parents to read to their children, I will be greatly rewarded. Jesus and Adam. Did you know that Adam knew Jesus? Adam was the first human being, made by God's special creation in the Garden of Eden (Gen.
